Mission Statement

The mission of Scott Lake Lodge is to provide guests with the most memorable fly-in fishing experience in North America, offering uncompromised customer service and safety.

MEET OUR STAFF

MIKE BOYD, HEAD CHEF

Some people love their hobbies. Other people love their work. Mike falls into the second category: he absolutely loves cooking. As he puts it, “cooking is my life and I can’t imagine doing anything else”.

His career started in his hometown of London, Ontario where he attended the Stratford Chef’s School. For seven years he was the Chef at the Village Café, a 30-seat café in downtown London, always rated as one of the Top 100 Restaurants in Canada. Recently he has been the Chef at Birdtail Waterfowl, a classy waterfowl lodge in Manitoba where Jason Hamilton, Scott Lake Lodge’s General Manager, ran into Mike and convinced him to head up the Scott kitchen.

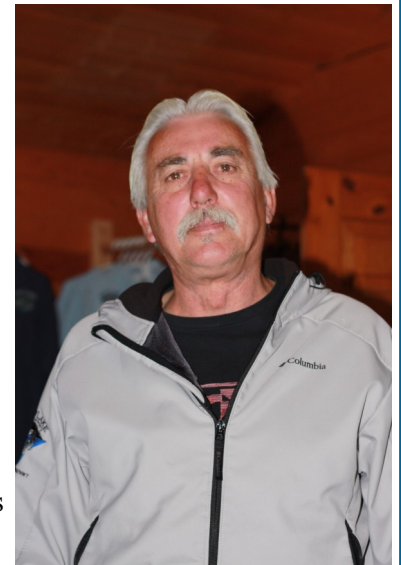

Between his chef assignments Mike will find time to fish for steelhead or salmon maybe 80 days a year. We think he’s right at home here.

GERRY YANISH, MAINTENANCE DEPARTMENT MANAGER

If there is a hero at Scott Lake Lodge, it’s the “Silver Fox”, Gerry Yanish. Gerry is everywhere, all at once. Wherever something needs fixing, Gerry is there and quickly.

Well into his second decade at Scott, Gerry has that knack for understanding how things work, and for making them work again. Growing up the youngest in a family of ten out in the country near Yorkton, Saskatchewan, Gerry always was a fixer. Gerry worked at a Yorkton furniture company on the sale’s floor prior to joining the Scott team.

He does winter jobs in construction during the off-season. Married with two sons, one a long time Scott guide (Steve), Gerry has a twelve year-old-granddaughter he is quite proud of—she is on the boy’s football team, halfback no less.

BRENDA SAVERY, HOSPITALITY TEAM MEMBER

Another Whitby, Ontario native, Brenda and Dani were childhood friends so it’s not surprising that Dani recruited Brenda to join the Scott Lake team three seasons ago. Brenda is not hard to spot around here: she’s the one who is always smiling.

Brenda attended Seneca College in the Toronto area gaining a diploma in Recreation and Leisure Services, not a bad fit at all for working at a fishing lodge. Always a sport’s enthusiast, Brenda was deep into baseball and gymnastics. She competed at the national level on the trampoline and once won first in synchronized trampoline.

Brenda has lived in Banff, Alberta and now lives in Victoria, British Columbia.

Glacial History of the Eastern NWT

The glacial history is uncovered from solid ground. Of the four major glaciations or ice ages of the Pleistocene, the last, named Wisconsin, began about 70,000 years ago and advanced and retreated several times during its first 50,000 years, opening and closing the Bering Land Bridge with each movement. The ice 20,000 years ago was up to three miles thick. Then it did shrink, opening the door for an influx of our present day mammals – caribou, moose, musk oxen as well as people. The North American continent simply warmed up and the ice gradually melted. The global thermostat is much more sensitive than common sense would suggest. It requires a global lowering of average temperature of only two to three degrees centigrade to start an ice age.

In the period of 20,000 to 10,000 years ago the world warmed up enough to move the glaciers to the fringes of the continent and a few alpine retreats. The melt water created massive lakes. Right here at Scott 11,000 years ago you would have been floating on Glacial Lake McConnell, a lake nearly 700 miles in length, running northwest by southeast. It encompassed all of the great northern lakes – Athabasca, Great Slave and Great Bear.

At about 9,000 years ago geological uplifts created tremendous pressures at the south end of the system and the “dam” let go draining much of the giant lake but leaving the three major lakes in the north. It was in the era that our fisheries started to develop. Our Scott Lake trout and pike are descendants of the fish from Lake McConnell.
